«... Other feminists have argued that Freudian "hysteria" is jouissance distorted by patriarchal culture and say that jouissance is a transcendent state that represents freedom from oppressive linearities. In her introduction to Cixous' The Newly Born Woman, literary critic Sandra Gilbert writes: "to escape hierarchical bonds and thereby come closer to what Cixous calls jouissance which can be defined as a virtually metaphysical fulfillment of desire that goes far beyond [mere] satisfaction... [it is a] fusion of the erotic the mystical, and the political...»

«... the result of transgressing the pleasure principle is not more pleasure but instead pain, since there is only a certain amount of pleasure that the subject can bear. Beyond this limit, pleasure becomes pain, and this initial "painful principle" develops into what Lacan calls jouissance. Thus jouissance is suffering, epitomized in Lacan's remark about "the recoil imposed on everyone, in so far as it involves terrible promises, by the approach of jouissance as such". Lacan also linked jouissance to the castration complex, and to the aggression of the death drive...»
